KEY ACTIVITY

› Stocks fell broadly to close a losing week: S&P 500 -1.0%, Nasdaq -1.5%, dragged by a semiconductor selloff after China's Moonshot AI unveiled a model narrowing the gap with US leaders (Applied Materials, Lam, Intel, Arm each ~-4%).

› Netflix sank ~7% after a soft Q3 revenue forecast, weighing on Communication Services (-1.8%), the day's worst sector.

▷ Energy (+1.2%) was the lone gainer as crude firmed on renewed Middle East tension after continued US strikes on Iran overnight; small caps held up best (Russell 2000 -0.5%).

NEWS & CATALYSTS

|      |                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| NFLX | Netflix fell ~7% on July 17 after guiding Q3 revenue to ~$12.86B (about 11.7% growth), below the Street's ~$13B, despite in-line Q2 results.                                         |
| GS   | Goldman Sachs slid nearly 3% as investors questioned the durability of its Q2 beat ($20.98 EPS vs $14.48 est.), with roughly three-quarters of the revenue jump coming from trading. |
| META | Meta dropped ~2.8% as communication-services and mega-cap growth names led the market lower amid fresh AI-competition worries.                                                         |
| AVGO | Broadcom fell ~1% as semiconductors sold off after China's Moonshot AI unveiled a model it says narrows the gap with top US offerings.                                                 |
| XOM  | Exxon rose ~1% as energy was the day's lone advancing sector, with crude firming on renewed Middle East tension after continued US strikes on Iran.                                    |
| MA   | Mastercard fell ~1.4% alongside broad weakness in payment and financial names on the risk-off session.                                                                                 |
| MKT  | US stocks closed a losing week lower on July 17 — S&P 500 -1.0%, Nasdaq -1.5% — as a semiconductor selloff and Netflix's soft guidance outweighed a rebound in energy.                 |
